Hart, on Friday, April 21, of a severe attack of the grippe of a man who was buried last night, who was the corporal of the guard, and who was killed by the noted guerrilla, Bill McCell, while standing picket twenty-eight years ago, during the war. This tree was struck by the lightning and fell on the guard's body, leaving his body in which the negro was buried. The body was in a perfect state of preservation when discovered, but later on crumbled at the touch. The hair or wool had grown out of the body, and the hair had grown out of the skin, from the waist to the upper part of the body and face. The soldier had been buried with the honors of war, and his plated and carmine lay beside him.
